“Group-focused enmity” - some results

so-called “group-focused enmity”

What's it about?

... “The humanity of a society is revealed most clearly not by its talk shows or way the newspapers discuss moral and ethical questions, but in the way it treats its weakest groups”.

☞ How do people with different social, religious and ethnic backgrounds pursue their different lifestyles in this society? How do they receive recognition? And where they are exposed to hostile mentalities?

elements of the so-called “group-focused enmity syndrome”

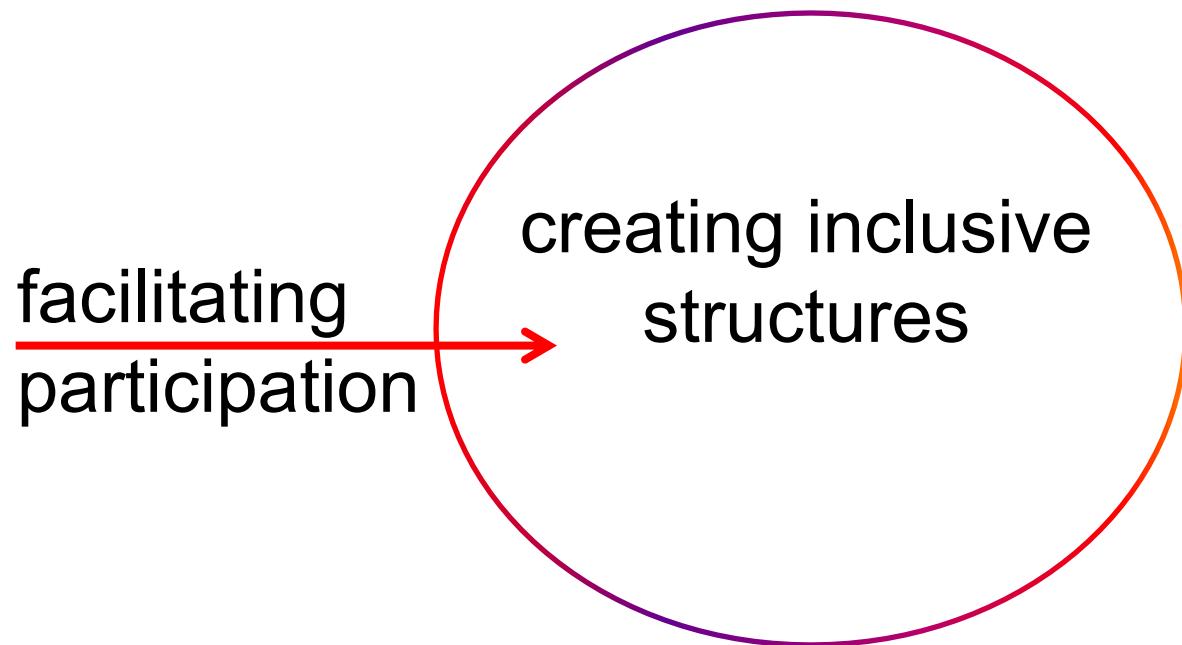

[see also URL: <http://www.uni-bielefeld.de/%28en%29/ikg/projekte/GMF/index.htm>]

example of one result of this study: prejudice against disabled people

- prejudice against disabled people comprises hostile attitudes towards people with physical or mental characteristics that are regarded as deviating from the "norm." It includes the idea that these people get "too much" support.
- Overall, negativity towards disabled people is stable or slightly falling. In 2010 almost 9 percent regarded many of the demands of disabled people as "excessive"; in 2005 it was 15 percent. 7 percent of respondents in 2010 said that too much is done for disabled people in Germany (2005: 8 percent). 6 percent (2005: 7.5 percent) believe that disabled people receive too many benefits.
